

Conservatives Debate the Issues

Tonight I had the opportunity to be the timekeeper at the 9th Congressional District debate. At first, I was mostly concerned with not messing up; but after settling in, I was able to enjoy the debate even if there wasn't any direct debating between the candidates.

I had a mic in front of me and I almost grabbed it when I didn't hear the answer I wanted concerning 3 questions: what to do about a nuclear Iran, what to do about entitlements, and what to do to equalize the benefits between widowed congressmen and widowed service members.

Since none of these issues will be part of my campaign for commissioner, I will keep my opinions to myself, for now. Needless to say, while I have my favorite, anyone of the 7 people who debated last night should represent us well up in Washington D.C.

Early voting is going on now, please remember to get to the polls.
